

Petra Dickmann is a risk communication expert with a strong background in humanities and medicine. She holds an MA in communication and completed her PhD in cultural and political sciences (HU Berlin & ETH Zurich) with an interdisciplinary research on biosecurity; she is also a medical doctor by training and did her medical doctoral research (MD) in the field of CBRN threats and their impact on public perception (King's College London & University Hospital Frankfurt). She is currently a Research Fellow at the London School of Economics and Political Science (LSE) conducting research on international health policy and global health security. Before joining LSE worked for the Centre for Biological Security at the Robert Koch Institute (the German federal institute for infectious diseases and prevention) and at the University Hospital Frankfurt (Department for Infectious Diseases) and developed risk communication strategies for highly infectious diseases and high containment laboratories. She has founded and is the director of strategic risk communication consultancy offering advice to global industry, international institutions and governments.

Petra is a member of the WHO virtual advisory board on Mass Gatherings and has worked in the framework of the Global Health Security Initiative (GHSI). She has developed risk communication training for the European Centres for Diseases and Infection Control (ECDC) and is working on risk communication projects for WHO.
